

Thought or Fact?

Not everything I think is a fact.
Let's check what happened in reality and what the interpretation I gave it was.

2. What am I telling myself about it?

Choose the thought that fits what came up for you.

They don't want me

This says something about me

I'm not good enough

This will probably get worse

Everyone noticed

Other

My thought: _____

1. What happened in reality?

Choose the context that fits what happened.

A message or response ☐

Notification ☐

Test ☐

Conversation ☐

At home ☐

Other ☐

What happened in short: _____

3. What is a fact and what is an interpretation?

Before deciding, let's separate what really happened (fact) from what I told myself about it (interpretation).

FACT

Things that can be seen, heard, or known.

A short reply arrived

The teacher
made a comment

The fact: _____

INTERPRETATION

What I tell myself this means.

I'm not okay

It means people are upset with me

My interpretation: _____

4. What can I check before I decide?

Look for more information

Ask a question

Did I understand correctly? ☐

Take a moment

Check whether there are other explanations

Is there another possibility? ☐

Talk with someone

Read the message again

Am I in danger /
okay? ☐

5. A more balanced sentence

A sentence that can help me think in a more balanced way.

There may be a few reasons

Maybe I don't know everything

It's possible to check

This is a thought, not a fact

My new sentence: _____

Thought Reminder

A fact is what happened.
An interpretation is what I tell myself about it.
When I separate between them,
it becomes easier to think
in a more balanced way.
